MADISON COUNTY, Va. (CBS19 NEWS) -- Jenny Lynd's Pizza has created a pop-up market inside of the restaurant, so residents can get the items they need.

"I really just wanted to be able to help people," said Crystal Garrett, the owner of the restaurant.

The store is selling items such as gloves, bleach, toilet paper, some food items and more.

Garrett said she decided to do it because she never uses all of the stuff her supplier sends her.

"When I order stuff, I was able to talk to my Sysco representative Sabrina that to find out what was needed for me, myself and when I realized the amounts that I was getting, I wasn't going to be able to go through a case of what I got," said Garrett. "People have been really supportive of the idea. They call me all the time and ask do you still have this, do you have that, or can I get this and if I don't have that item that I'm looking for, I see if I can get it for them."

She said with only two main stores in the county, she hopes it takes some of the strain off those stores.

"They put a lot of stress on the two little stores we have," said Garrett. "Food Lion is not the biggest Food Lion you've ever seen and the Dollar Store is not huge either, and they are only able to get so much because they ship out to many other branches, so having the third option is actually kind of helpful for them or I at least hope it is."

It also gives residents another option within Madison.

"We have an older community here in Madison and a lot of them are high-risk people and they don't want to do the traveling that they feel is unnecessary and feel that it risks their family or themselves," Garrett said.

Even though she hopes to go back to making pizzas full-time, she hopes to keep the pop-up market going.

"If people want me to keep it going, I will keep it going," said Garrett. "If there's other items they want me to add, if I can get ahold of them, I will."
